The Filmmakers of

Justin Price

Writer & Director

Being under 30 years old and garnering attention in Hollywood is no easy task but it is one he humbly accepts as part of his current reality. Graduating and moving across country to California, he always focused on attempting to take on overly ambitious projects and The Cloth fits within that mold. Doing a low-budget feature film is challenging enough, but Justin always felt that no matter the budget it is important to tell a good story and to surround yourself with great people. After releasing an ultra-low budget film through theaters last year, this will be the first of many glimpses into what promises to be a unique career.

Jason R. Johnston

Director of Photography

With ten years of photography and television commercial production experience behind him, Johnston began to hone his visual talent with the added dimension of movement as a cinematographer on many award-winning short films. Four years later, Johnston had served as an "A" camera operator and Steadicam first assistant for an Emmy-winning director of photography on several feature-length movies.

1313 FX Demon Concepts

One can easily look at the artwork that covers Tom Devlin's arms and realize that this guy has an obsession with creatures and dead things. He has a passion for gore that began as a child when he would make two rounds of the neighborhood on Halloween, one in make-up and another in a mask. His journey began at Joe Blasco's make-up school. Tom's first break came when he landed a job at Matthew Mungle's shop WM Creations. Here he worked on several feature films such as The Scorpion King, Red Dragon and Daredevil and TV series like CSI Miami and X-Files for which they were nominated for an Emmy. As founder of 1313fx, Tom has worked as Key Special Makeup FX or Special Makeup FX Supervisor on over 50 independent feature films. Now adding The Cloth to his long list of achievements.
